MUD ON THE ROADS

- Farmers and contractors who deposit mud on the road open themselves up to a range of offences under the Highway Act 1980, the Road Traffic Act 1988 and to civil prosecution.

- Section 137 of the Highways Act states if a person wilfully obstructs the free passage along a highway they are guilty of an offence. Section 148 adds: “If without lawful authority or excuse a person deposits anything whatsoever on a highway to the interruption of any user of the highway he is guilty of an offence.”
- Section 149 says if anything is deposited on the highway which constitutes a nuisance or danger the Highway Authority can require the person who put it there to remove it.
- The Act goes on to say if anyone is injured as a result of a deposit on the highway then the person who left it is guilty of an offence.
- The Road Traffic Act 1988 also covers situations where a mechanically propelled vehicle is driven dangerously on a road. Driving dangerously can include moving a vehicle in a state that could cause danger to others because it deposits mud on the road.
- It is therefore recommended that farmers put out “slippery road” signs with a secondary “mud on road” message to alert other road users. However, the signs do not eliminate the farmer’s obligation to do something about the mud, including cleaning as much mud as possible from the vehicle before leaving the field gate.
- The road should also be cleaned as necessary through the working day and always at the end of the working day.
- If a contractor is engaged, there should be a clear discussion about who is taking responsibility for putting out signs and taking on the clear-up, with a written record kept of the conclusions.
